

LEGACIES

Many people are concerned with passing things on to their children as legacies. Wills are drawn up, mothers save bridal gowns in layers of tissue paper, special china is stored in a cupboard, a treasured photo is preserved, a memory of an ancestor is remembered and repeated. What is the most important thing you would want to pass on to your (real or imaginary) children? Describe it and give reasons why it is so important to you that your children possess it. You may want to consider any of the following as “legacies”: a precious possession; a value or goal; a memory; a cultural heritage; a habit or character trait; a skill; a family tradition.
